1 Wupatki National Monument
Wupatki National Monument, located in northern Arizona, is a protected area that preserves numerous ancestral Puebloan sites, particularly those built after the eruption of nearby Sunset Crater Volcano. It showcases the rich cultural history of the region, offering visitors a chance to explore the remains of ancient settlements and learn about the people who once called this area home.

2 Sunset Crater Volcano National Monument
Sunset Crater Volcano National Monument in Arizona showcases a dramatic landscape formed by volcanic activity, particularly the recent eruption of Sunset Crater, which is the youngest volcano in the San Francisco Volcanic Field. The monument preserves and interprets the geology, human history, and cultural significance of this area, offering visitors opportunities to explore lava flows, cinder cones, and diverse ecosystems.

3 Cameron Trading Post
The Historic Cameron Trading Post is a shop, restaurant, motel and RV park—all in one.
Shop the Post's selection of American Indian crafts and Southwestern art. Feeling hungry? Enjoy a meal inspired by American, Mexican and local cuisine, such as their famous Navajo taco, in the Cameron Grand Canyon dining room while you relax by the large stone fireplace.
Take a walk through the on-site garden or peruse the selection of antique and new American Indian art and crafts in the gallery.
If all that has left you tired, the Trading Post's on-site lodge offers simple, yet comfortable accommodations decorated with hand-carved furnishings in historic Southwestern decor. For travelers who prefer their own RVs and campers, full hook-ups (electrical, sewage and water) and pull-through sites are offered adjacent to the Cameron grounds right off US Highway 89.

4 East Rim Drive
The East Rim Drive at Crater Lake National Park provides a scenic and accessible way to explore the lake and its surrounding landscape. It's a 33-mile loop that hugs the caldera rim, offering numerous overlooks with views of the lake, volcanic features, and surrounding forests. The drive also provides access to campgrounds, hiking trails, and picnic areas.

5 Grand Canyon Village
Grand Canyon Village is the main visitor hub on the South Rim of the Grand Canyon National Park. It's a full-service community with lodging, food, shops, a hospital, and more, designed to accommodate tourists. The village is a historic area, with many buildings dating back to the early 1900s when the railroad was completed to the South Rim.

San Francisco Peaks

The "San Francisco Peaks" refers to a cluster of volcanic peaks, including Humphrey's Peak, the highest point in Arizona, located north of Flagstaff. The San Francisco Peaks are a prominent feature of the landscape and are significant for their natural beauty and cultural importance to Native American tribes. The area is characterized by high elevation, diverse ecosystems, and a unique combination of volcanic features and alpine environments.
